New post on Wisdom from The Lord of the Rings

 The Hands of the King are The Hands of a Healer. Aragorn in The Houses of Healing.

by stephencwinter

I have been looking forward to this part of The Lord of the Rings for some time now. Regular readers know that I have been carefully reading the story and that each week I write a reflection inspired by what I have just been reading. In weeks I have been reading Tolkien's account of the Pelennor Fields and the Death of the Fall of the Witch King of Angmar at the hands of Rohan and Meriadoc Brandybuck of The Shire.

And now I want to turn to the beautiful account of the King to The Houses of Healing. In weeks to come we will walk with him to the aid of Faramir, Éowyn and Merry and feel for others of the king and perhaps, from afar, catch a glimpse of athelas.

It is this ancient belief that Tolkien draws upon here in the stories of Aragorn's healings, and ancient belief that I would argue was seen at work in Viktor Frankl's experience in the Nazi concentration camps. Frankl showed implicitly in a way that Moore and Gillette do explicitly that access to the King Archetype is available to all of us and will order, heal and bless.
